We will watch a documentary movie and discuss based on the movie with participants and the special guest.

Documentary to watch

Zoo Revolution (2013)

Zoo Revolution takes the viewer deep inside the increasingly controversial debate about the value of zoos in the 21st century. Are zoos an old-fashioned and outmoded way of displaying animals for entertainment - an idea whose time has come and gone? Or are zoos more important than ever before, at the vanguard of species-survival and public education? Zoo Revolution presents experts and animal lovers on both sides of the argument in Canada, the UK, the USA, Germany and Australia. - Written by Geoff D'Eon (Director) (http://www.imdb.com/title/tt3696518/?ref_=ttpl_pl_tt)

Robert Shumaker

As the Indianapolis Zoo's Executive Vice President and Zoo Director, Dr. Robert Shumaker has exceptional credentials, including 20 years' experience at the Smithsonian Institution's National Zoo (where he first encountered orangutans on a one-to-one basis) and later as Director of Orangutan Research at the Great Ape Trust in Des Moines, Iowa. He is recognized as one of the world's foremost experts in primate behavior, including the cognitive abilities of the highly intelligent orangutan, and is a highly regarded lecturer.

Aiming ねらい

Modern zoos consider the core ethical challenges faced by people or organizations who choose to hold and display animals in zoos, aquariums, or sanctuaries. Zoos have the potential to be a great educational place, promote conservation awareness, and to prevent animals from going extinct. However, its impacts, including the costs of wild animals losing their "wild-liberty", daily visited by many people, and exhibiting less naturalistic behaviors by its confinements is still a challenge. What do you think is right? We would like to know your thoughts on this by inviting you to an open discussion at the Kyoto City Zoo Café. There is no wrong or right answer, but through discussion, we can potentially reach a better outcome for the animals we keep. Join students, professors, visitors and scientists alike in this exciting discussion!
